I still remember "Green Stuff"'s maiden voyage out on the lake when a marble got caught up in the water intake for the engine that was under the boat, and it jammed in so tight that it almost burned up the motor right off the bat. They managed to get it to a spot where they were able to get under the boat and dislodge the marble, and everyone was once again able to enjoy the rest of the day getting sunburned and skiing all over the lake. I'll never forget the specific whine of the V-Drive that boat had, as you could tell from just about anywhere you heard it that it was "GreenStuff". Fun times!! Keith was a wonderful and positive influence in many lives including mine, and I'll never forget him and the family experiences I was part of along the way.
