Although I moved to another state our relationship was never hindered by it. We often spoke on the phone (mostly for special occasions such as our birthdays and holidays), but also during my yearly trips back home I would visit my mother and spend what time I could with her. I didn't photo document all the times that I spent with her, but I was fortunate to have her come to visit me on only two occasions, so I had those moments documented. They were the two best occasions I could ask for and they were both for Christmas. The photos below are from those visits. The first time was in 12/2016 when we had manicures and pedicures done and I needed proof that I had her hands/feet. The second time was in 12/2019 when she got to attend my friends secret santa event where my friends kindly made her feel welcomed and got her a gift as well. My mother has always been supportive of me and my interests that she even did finger hearts with me. I loved my mother and made sure she knew it. I loved her deeply in the best way that I knew how. We had out ups and downs as parent to child, but I couldn't ask for a better mother. She was a strong person and in turn I feel like I've gotten my strength from her. I am my mothers daughter and I'm definitely who I am because of her. I'm going to miss her as much as I loved her. I'm glad she is at peace now and no longer has the worldly burdens or pains.

I found another photo today, but I'm unable to upload it to this post. In 12/2016 we also went and saw the Zoo Lights. It was absolutely magical. I believe this was before my mom's knee surgery so walking around was a little difficult, so although we walked slow and took breaks for her this is another example of all of the things she is that I mentioned above.

I remember the trips which Jenny and I used to take. Jenny and I went on a vacation to Yellowstone. We stayed there for several days and were able to enjoy being out in nature together. We also took a trip to Southern Utah. We went to Bryce Canyon, Pink Coral San Dunes State Park and Red Canyon. The last trip I took with her was to the Oregon Coast. I am happy that we got to travel together. Jenny was a great sister to me and I am glad that we kept in touch.

Although Jennifer was in my previous ward, our friendship continued. I visited her beautiful community garden on several occasions and enjoyed seeing and tasting the fruits of her labors! We enjoyed eating lunch together on various occasions. She often shared family experiences and expressed her love for her children and grandchildren. I was amazed at her vast knowledge on many subjects and her wisdom in applying that knowledge. I will miss my dear friend, Jennifer. May God bless and comfort her siblings, posterity and friends.
