“ I remember that time when we were at Costco and we walked back to the car because we forgot something. Little did we know that our car was next to an identical model, besides the non-leather seating. When we opened the car we started looking for the thing we forgot and then I realized that the seats weren't leather and that this wasn't our car! "Dad, dad this isn't our car," I said and he looked back at me like I was crazy until he realized it too. We laughed so hard and couldn't understand how the key worked on a different car. It's times like these, the small funny bits of life with him, that I will always miss with my dad.
