“ Oh Elayne, you were my second mother, you watched over me as a child growing up, living just South of you. You let me mow your lawn, and shovel the snow around your house, and gently cussed me for throwing snow balls at your house when I was a young dickens, you taught me that it was Ok to be feisty when needed. Often, I recall how many times you would take my pull over Tee shirt off of me, because I was wearing it inside-out, and kindly place it back on right, and then chuckle at me. You would call me to come over to your side of the fence, and then you would cut me your best rose's to give to my momma, which in turn would make my mom cry with tender joy. Elayne would say to me Shane do you want to make five dollars, to that I would say: Oh yeah, at that she would hand me a bucket and say climb the cherry tree and fill it up half way, so I did, and got a tummy ache in the process. I love you Elayne, and I am very confident, that we will be together in the age soon to come. -Shane Draney
