“ And as for how to put a price on life . . . sit with an insurance guy for 5 mientus . . . they have tables that will sum it up pretty quick . . . I've always had some life insurance provided by my employers, and, being the single guy with no kids, I've never worried about the amount beyond making sure it was enough to get me cremated, and to throw a big party. However, having no one to take care of me when I'm old, I did take out long-term care insurance. Not sure which is worse; figuring out how much is required to take care of your family when you're gone, or how much is required to keep your vegetative self in diapers when you go senile. Hopefully I see it coming while I'm still with it enough to make sure it doesn't get to that point. Rental car. Bridge abutment.
